Valuable Painting in the Georgetown

Convent.

Some account has recently been given in the mable prints of a painting in the convent in disorgetown, which was brought from Spain by the lather of the late (on). Meade, and presented by him to that institution, about sixty years ago, as the work of Mortilo according to the best recollection and belief of the Sisters of the Convent. In a matter of less importance the facts already published would be accepted as astisfactory, proof that the picture is a veritable. Murillo, but the present great value of the works of that master, and the efforts that are making to identify, authentiate, and catalogue them, render it necessary to apply every possible test of its genuineness before the claim will be regarded as established. The fallowing are some of the further facts and considerations which may be mentioned as leading in that direction. Murillo became the chief of what was called the School of Seville. His pictures, generally of religious subjects, were of a less sometre character than those of the earlier Spanish painters. He was an industrious and profile painter, and his works, often of large size, one on carvas in the churchs of San Philipp Nept, in Cadiz, II i mistake indiction of the standard of the churchs and convents at seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, as well as those of Cadiz, Mailing of the convents at Seville, and villa of the convents at Seville.

To the Littler of the Sanday Hereis:

Sir: I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. Charles Lincoln, the pentleman who is to give the bound show of dogs thour city at the Skating Rink, commencing February 20 next, in which he informs me that from letters and assurances received by himself from prominent breeters and owners of fine-hered dogs he feels assured that the projected show will be on a grand scale. Your correspondent, in a recent issue of tire Herato, struck the proper keynore when he made the timely and apprortate suggestion to the merchants of our city. Mr. Lincoln, when he arrives in the city and has things systematiced, will call upon our merchants in behalf of the show and will solicit from them such donations as they may see fit to bestow in aid of the enterprise. Gestlemen, you who have large and prosperous business homes, do toward Washington's Isilial 'dog show' as do the merchants in the cities of New York and eisewhere. These exhibitions have extensive followers from all parts of the country, and it is to be hoped that our own citizens will give the enterprise a good send off, so that the visiters from far and near may carry to their respective homes a favorable immercation made by the generosity of our people in behalf of a praisworthy object. If we understand Mr. Lincoln's infention coursely—and we think that we do—this show is not intended to be a combination show of poultry and dogs, but rather of dogs only. We have no desire to detract from a chicken show by baving dogs on exhibition at the same time and in the same place, which would maturally follow, but losted the fanciers of fowls get up an exhibition on their own hook. A Brave Irish Lad.

In the French army the bugler of the Eighteenth Royal Irish Regiment at the recent battle of fed-el-Kebir, would have received the cross and bugle of honor. This youngster, a mere lad, was breast to breast with Maj. Hart at the head of the attacking force. Turning, as he scrambled up the face of the works, to sound the charging call, a hostlie rifle-butt came down on his head and he was tumbled into the dlitch. He staggered to his feet, picked up his bugle, and followed the rei wave which had rolled by during his disaster. He got to the front, where the rank and file were treating the foe to the cold steel, according to the prescription of Sir Garnet Wolseley. Here he raised a brazen note, but in the midst of it was bayoneted in the shoulder by a Nubian. The Irish bop bad lost his sword in the fall, but he held his bugle in his fist and with this he joined battle with his black antagonist, whom he put down in no time with that "point of war," called in Ireland "a hand and foot. " Then, standing over his prostrate capities, he blew a Strumpet blast. The performance is related by Lieut. Drummond. Welff, who adds in his letter that the drollery of the performance set the soldlers laughing even in the very thick of the carninge. The feat had more humor and not less valor in it than that of the French drummer at the battle of the pynamics, who had his right hand slashed off by a horseman of the descri-A Brave Irish Lad.
